1. Q&M eyes joint venture with 2 China companies to manufacture surgical masks

Q&M Dental Group ("Q&M") is in talks with two China-based companies over a joint venture to manufacture surgical masks. This is in order to reduce the company's reliance on external manufacturers and suppliers of surgical masks and to safeguard the company against future supply shocks. The outbreak of the novel coronavirus (Covid-19) has led to a surge in prices for surgical masks, on the back of a worldwide shortage in supply. While the group said it has so far managed to maintain a healthy stockpile of surgical masks for its staff and employees, it added that the shortage has "adversely affected" medical and healthcare institutions. The group announced it has entered into a non-binding memorandum of understanding ("MOU") with Hubei Aishubao Living Supplies Co and Guangzhou Pharmasen Co. Aishubao produces and sells Class 1 medical devices in China, while Pharmasen is involved in the wholesale and distribution of medical equipment there. Q&M did not specify where the activities of the proposed joint venture company are expected to be based. The total expected investment amount was also not disclosed. Under the terms of the MOU, Q&M will contribute 20% of the total registered share capital of the joint venture company, with Aishubao and Pharmasen contributing 70% and 10% respectively.

RedDoorz cut close to 50 employees in 'appraisal' exercise

Singapore-based budget hotel operator RedDoorz confirmed that it has trimmed nearly 50 employees from its Indonesia office as part of a "periodic staff appraisal exercise" in February. That amounts to 8% of its more than 600-strong Indonesian team. Globally, the laid off employees made up less than 5% of the startup's total workforce. RedDoorz announced that the cuts were in line with usual HR practices. RedDoorz has close to 1,100 employees across four offices in South-east Asia. The move comes as many other startups in the region have likewise cut staff during reorganisation exercises as part of their efficiency drives.
